In the spring of 2014 the Institute Nova Revija for the Humanities presented to its collaborating partners in the field of interdisciplinary humanities the initiative for the establishment of the Forum for the Humanities with the intention:

- to stimulate an international critical discussion regarding the situation of humanity in the context of European and global circumstances defined, on the one hand, by an immense developmental potential and, on the other, by overwhelming social contradictions and conflicts;
- to extend invitation to participate in the productive discussion not only to humanist scientists, but also to representatives of other scientific disciplines, as well as to personalities active in the realm of cultural creativity;
- to seek for such an international discussion conversation partners within the media and in the sphere of political decision-making.

Humanistic knowledge can, insofar as it traverses historical horizons and future perspectives, offer fundamental precepts for a contemporary human dialogue open for the common as well as for the different.

The FORhUM today comprises already 114 members from 38 countries of the world.
